

WILD DWELLING

The Wild Dwelling Home

A mini guide to creating a space that feels like you

INTRO

Welcome to Wild Dwelling

Most homes aren't designed.
They're copied.

And that's often why they don't feel right.

Wild Dwelling was created as a different approach –
one rooted in feeling, not trend.

A home should reflect the life lived within it.
The materials you're drawn to.
The pieces you've gathered over time.
The quiet moments that happen there every day.

This is not about creating a perfect space.
It's about creating one that feels like you.

Table of contents

ABOUT 01

SHIFT 02

MOOD 04

MATERIALS 06

EDITING 08

FINAL NOTE 09

ABOUT

This mini guide is a starting point.

A simple introduction to creating a home
that feels calm, intentional, and entirely your own.

Inside, you'll find a different way to approach your space – one that begins with how you want it to feel,
and builds from there.

Not through trends or templates,
but through materials, editing, and thoughtful choices.

This is not about doing everything at once.
It's about small shifts that create lasting change.

The Wild Dwelling volumes expand on this approach – offering deeper guidance on how to shape your home through mood, organization, and collected living.

Each one is designed to help you build a space that feels grounded, lived in, and uniquely yours.

THE SHIFT

Most homes don't feel right not because of what's in them –
but because of how they were created.

Built from trends.
From inspiration boards.
From pieces that don't truly belong together.

The shift is simple.

Start with how you want your home to feel.

Not what it should look like.

Because when you begin with feeling,
everything that follows becomes more intentional.

THE MOOD

Before choosing anything for your home, pause and consider how you want it to feel.

Calm.
Warm.
Grounded.
Quiet.

Mood is what anchors a space.

It guides every decision – from materials to layout to what stays and what goes.

When the mood is clear,
the space begins to take shape naturally.

This is where everything begins.

MATERIALS

A space isn't defined by style – It's defined by what it's made of.

Wood.
Linen.
Stone.
Ceramic.

Natural materials bring warmth and depth.
They soften a space and make it feel lived in.

Layering textures creates interest without overwhelm – allowing a home to feel both simple and complete.

EDITING

Your home doesn't need more.

It needs less – but better.

Editing is what brings clarity to a space.

Removing what doesn't belong.
Keeping only what feels aligned.

This is where a home begins to feel intentional – not styled, but lived in.

Not everything needs to stay.

This is just the beginning.

The Wild Dwelling volumes explore this approach more deeply – guiding you through creating spaces that feel calm, collected, and entirely your own.

